

Endwyke Hall

Appomattox, Virginia

A c.1800 FEDERAL STYLE REPLICA

From Vision to Reality

A Seller's Journey

In our modern, 21st century of mass produced, sub-division, look alike homes, with little character and design, we offer you 'Endwyke Hall.' Diana and I, having a deep love of history, American architecture, and our admiration of craftsmanship and detail, wanted a home of a bygone era. Our search for the perfect blend of an historic home but with modern conveniences and in good repair became difficult if not impossible. Not being discouraged we thought, why not build a brand new 'old home'?

And build it we did. We found perfect acreage in historic Appomattox County that permitted us to have privacy, rolling hills, grass and room for our horses, a serene view, but with an easy drive to local conveniences. We also looked for an architect that knew how to build a home of the colonial era. Our architect, who studied at Williamsburg, suggested the late 18th century, Georgian/Federal era home of the period. A center-hall, brick home was perfect! He copied designs of the period with four massive chimneys that would contain eight working fireplaces, a rear porch and two porticos. The interior design is true to the period by an exhaustive amount of research and many visits to historic homes to capture the look and the feel of an historic home. At a time when homes have open-floor plans and little detail, 'Endwyke' has much handcrafted attention to detail. With 10 foot ceilings, ornamental doorways, multiple layers of crown moldings, to the hand-built mantels of all eight fireplaces, to the elaborate bookcases in the library, 'Endwyke' suggests both elegance and comfort.

Selling "Endwyke" is a heartbreak for us and the toughest decision we ever made. My law practice has grown exponentially and requires that I travel to Wyoming so often as to make it burdensome, exhausting, and expensive for the clients. For this reason, we must return to Wyoming.
